

Declaration of Independence

Under the auspices of, Today

The unanimous declaration of the thirteen united States of America, ,

1. warm-up (not that important)

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for a people to dissolve the political connections which have connected them from themselves, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of humanity requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

2. litany of offenses (important stuff)

Behold these proofs to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, and that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudently, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same arbitrary design, evinces a design to reduce them to absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future safety. Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former system of government. The history of the present form of government of the United States of America is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having the direct effect of rendering the Colonies politically impotent. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

1. Government disturbs, perturbs and thoroughly upsets my pursuit of happiness.
2. It restrains and usurps my liberty.
3. It jeopardizes my safety.
4. It ignores the popular will, of which my will is sometimes a part.
5. It fails to represent me adequately.
6. It imposes citizenship on the people without their knowledge or consent.
7. It has failed to solicit my consent to be governed.

In every stage of these Oppressions We have petitioned for redress in the most humble prayers: our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated silence.

C. resolution (what we're gonna do about it)

We, therefore, the united city-sons of the Divided States of Amererrorca, in general conscience assembled, appealing to the supreme jury of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name, and by the Othority of the Good People of these states, solemnly publish and declare, that these united citizens are, and of light ought to be free and codependent with the state; that we are resolved to full allegiance to the fictitious state, and that all political connexion between them and the government, is and ought to be totally resolved; and that as free and codependent with the state, they have full power to levy words, seek a peaceful conscience, establush their citizenship, consent to be governed, and to do all other acts and things which codependent states and citizens may of rite do do. And for the support of this decluration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine condoms, we mutually pledge to each other our selves, our fourtunes and our sacral honors. Amen.

4. post scripture (cover me)

For good measure, I shall also declare and declaim my citizenship lest someone say or complain our declaration of codependence was made by an alien.

So, I, the overheard, hereby voluntarily opt in to U.S. citizenship and I agree to discharge my dooties to the best of my ability and as I see fit. There. That makes it official. Shit.

Now, I must warn you, I am very difficult to get along with. I am not content to have other people tell me how to live, nor am I willing to have them act in my name without first consulting me, so it seems we have some work to do. My first act as a fresh, new, and willing U.S. citizen is to congratulate you, my fellow members: you have done an OK job thussofar. For my second and third acts, I shall criticize then attack, this, our democratic project. Epee!
